

6
AFFAIRS OF THE RAILWAYS

The Atchison Denies It Is Seeking an Eastern Outlet by Way of Indianapolis.

Coming Revision of Rate-Sheets—World's Fair Traffic Already Under Discussion—Advances in Corn Rates Postponed.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Officials of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road positively deny the report that their company has any intention of securing, through the Jacksonville Southeastern company, control of the Indianapolis, Decatur & Western either by lease or purchase. They say the Atchison has no desire to extend its system eastward, and is not contemplating any new deals. Its present connection with the Jacksonville Southeastern is simply a traffic arrangement, and it has no proprietary interest in that line. The recent statement of Chairman Magoun, of the Atchison board of directors, to the effect that no further extensions of the system would be undertaken for some time to come, was made in good faith, it is claimed, and there is no present intention of departing from that policy.

Chairman F. C. Donald, of the passenger department of the Central Traffic Association, has called a meeting of the committee and rate clerks, to be held Tuesday, Jan. 2, to make changes for the quarterly issue of joint rate-sheets taking effect Feb. 1. The chairman calls attention to the fact that in second-class rates from Missouri river points to western Colorado, Montana, Utah and Idaho points, quoted in the trans-mississippi west-bound rate-sheet, and adds: "It is of the utmost importance that every line and association in the country be represented in order to secure the greatest uniformity possible in the rates, and as it is practicable to do so, the differences between the various interests in establishing through rates, and with this end in view we cordially appeal to the committee and rate clerk to be present, and especially request that they remain until the work is finished."

A meeting of the general managers of the Western roads centering in Chicago was held at the general offices of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy to-day to devise plans for the conveyance of passengers and freight during the world's fair, and to agree upon schedules. After a full discussion of the matter it was decided to take definite action at this time, but to appoint General Manager Benjamin Thomas, of the Western Indiana road, a committee of one to confer with Director-General Davis, traffic manager Jacob, and other world's fair authorities relative to their views and suggestions in the matter. It was given out at the meeting that the railroads will be in harmony with the world's fair people in the matter of transportation and schedules.

The Eastern roads have postponed the advance in corn rates to the meeting of the Central Traffic Association until Jan. 10. The through rate to seaboard points will be advanced Jan. 1, as originally proposed, but, owing to the fact that the Southern east-bound lines to disturb the present rates to intermediate points until ten days later, the Chicago roads have decided to accept the delay. The Chicago roads have a contract on its hands which does not expire until Jan. 10.

Announcement is made of the appointment of John G. Taylor as live-stock agent of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, vice J. W. Hamilton, resigned.

Drawing Business from Northern Lines. With the improvement to the physical condition of Southern lines and the putting in service of more modern passenger equipments, the business of Southern roads has increased to such an extent that the roads north of the Ohio river feel it. Formerly two-thirds of the passenger business from New Orleans, Memphis, Birmingham, Atlanta and other Southern cities, when going to New York or any Eastern city, came first to Cincinnati and then took the Bee-line, the Baltimore & Ohio, the Erie or the Pennsylvania lines east, the other third going via the more Southern lines. Now just exactly the opposite is the case, two-thirds of the business takes the Southern lines via Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia, and are known as the Piedmont lines, being the most fortunate in securing the business. It is understood that the Southern lines eastward from Washington to New York, the Pennsylvania gets a good haul, but its Western feeders north of the Ohio river line in carrying passengers, as do the other trunk lines south of Cincinnati. Present indications are that the St. Louis, Cincinnati and Indianapolis lines will have only the Southern and Western business to help them out. In speaking of this matter a general passenger agent, who was in New Orleans last week, said that one road out of New Orleans in November 807 tickets for New York via the Southern routes to Washington, against thirty-six sold to go East over the old route, via Cincinnati.

Personal, Local and General Notes.

D. C. Bacon, general manager of the Indiana Car-service association, has gone to Urbana, O., to spend Christmas.

The earnings of the Ohio Southern road are showing an increase over those of last year in December of over $5,000 a week.

Very handsome quarters have been fitted up in the Jacksonville Southeastern road, by Layton, the new general agent of the Pullman company at this point.

H. C. Parker, traffic manager of the Lake Erie & Western, will spend Christmas with friends in Pennsylvania, and will return to Chicago to attend to some official matters.

The Lake Erie & Western earned in the third week of December, gross, $61,007.95; net, $44,408.78. The increase in the first three weeks of December is $15,624.47.

M. T. Seymour, formerly superintendent of the Toledo division of the Columbus & Hocking Valley road, has been appointed manager of the Columbus, Shawnee & Hocking road.

Wm. Greene, general manager of the Big Four lines, who has been in New York for a few days arranging time schedules with the Vanderbilt lines, returned from that city last evening.

The directors of the Belt road and of the Indianapolis live-stock yards will meet Jan. 6, at which time a quarterly dividend of 1 1/2 per cent. on the preferred stock will be declared, and a semi-annual dividend of 8 per cent. on the common stock.

The through, as well as the local, passenger trains were yesterday crowded with passengers. Col. John W. of the Vandalia, brought in No. 39, which had been a few days between St. Louis and Indianapolis, yet he handled 160 local and 44 through passengers on that train.

It is said that at no time since 1880 have freight rates east and west-bound been more fully lived up to than at present. The recent investigations by the Interstate-commerce Commission have had the effect, it is said, to put freight men who were easy on freight matters on their guard.

Joseph Ramsey, Jr., assistant to President Ingalls, of the Big Four, will be in the city to-morrow, and will bring with him the acceptance of the viaduct ordinance, properly signed by Wm. R. McKee, of the Vandalia, and Mr. Ingalls, they being the officials whose signatures it was necessary to secure.

The employees in the Brightwood shops are feeling quite proud of the private car they built for Assistant General Manager Barnard, of the Big Four, so favorably does it compare with the private cars which have been built at much greater expense at such works as the Pullman and Wagner car companies.

General Manager Bradbury, of the Lake Erie & Western, stated last evening that the earnings of the road for the present year would pay operating expenses, fixed charges, taxes, rentals and improvements to the property and leave a surplus of $750,000, a sum sufficient to pay a 6 per cent. dividend on the preferred stock.

Joseph Averill, general yardmaster of the Vandalia at this point, says there has been a remarkable increase in the coal traffic of the Terre Haute & Indianapolis road the last few weeks. The road is now bringing to Indianapolis from forty to fifty car-loads of clay country coals a day, against ten to twelve car-loads at the corresponding time last year, which is about one-half as much as the road brought in daily in the fall and winter months before natural gas was introduced here.

It is expected that next week the deal by which the Big Four and the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton exchange properties on Alabama street and Virginia avenue will be settled. While a belief prevails that the trade will eventually be carried out, it is thought that some questions between the two companies will be adjusted through arbitration, the value of certain portions of the property to be exchanged not being fully agreed upon between President Ingalls and President Woodford.

The Big Four passenger department claims that the Southwestern limited fast train put on two years ago has become a pronounced success, and they back the statement by showing the number of passengers carried from month to month as compared with the first year it was put on. Going east, in the month of November, the Big Four turned over to the Lake Shore road an average of fifty-four through passengers a day, and this was only an average month with the preceding months of this year.

A general passenger agent of a competing line of the Pennsylvania Company remarked, last evening, that E. A. Ford had treated the roads to so many surprises of late that he would not be at all surprised were it to be announced by him any day that 2 cents per mile would be the rate on all lines of the Pennsylvania Company on all classes of tickets. Officials of the Pennsylvania Company admit that such a reduction in passenger rates has been seriously thought of and will come unless there is less tampering with rates in the Central Traffic territory.

The investigation by the Chicago grand jury into the acts of railway officials already indicted is suspended, and awaits the judgment of the United States Supreme Court as to whether the witnesses in contempt, Mosera, Connelman and Peasey, must answer. When that is settled the Chicago investigation will be renewed. G. M. Ingalls and George C. Woodford, appointments as associate or assistant district attorneys expire by limitation on Jan. 1, will be reappointed to assist in the trial of the investigation. They have been so advised by the Attorney-general.

A Wabash freight man says the Wabash people should not be blamed for working their east-bound freight traffic via Detroit and then over the Canada lines, as a business way the Canada route reciprocates with a much larger tonnage than would any of their connecting lines via Toledo. As proof of this, he stated that the west-bound through business over the Wabash in November showed earnings this year of $60,170, an increase of $14,755, while in east-bound business a large decrease in earnings is shown, which demonstrates the wisdom of working with the Canadian lines.

H. J. Rhein, general agent of the Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton at this point, yesterday received a letter from General Passenger Agent McCormick expressing gratification that the receipts from sales of tickets had increased so handsomely with former years, the statements showing that at the Indianapolis office there had been a larger per cent. of increase from sales of tickets than at any other point on the system. This was gratifying to Mr. Rhein, as he is just closing his first year as general agent of the company at this point.

The traffic department of the Lake Erie & Western road has experienced a good deal of trouble in educating shippers on the Fort Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville road. Former traffic managers have been liberal with passes and agent as liberal in naming rates, but when the road passed under control of the Lake Erie & Western, which works with all the important roads of the country, it became necessary to bill freights and take the position as regards passes which is recognized by the rules of such organizations as the Central Traffic and Trunk-line associations.

C. C. Waite, president of the Columbus & Hocking Valley road, has prepared a financial annual statement, estimating the business of the remaining days of the year, which will show the gross earnings of the road this year to be $8,000,000; net earnings, $5,500,000; an increase of $84,414, or, in other words, the gross earnings increased 30 per cent., operating expenses 17 per cent., and net earnings 24 per cent., as compared with the year 1889. During the year several and troublesome suits have been settled. Extraordinary expenses resulted from the general improvement to the property and increasing its equipments.

In its issue of this week the Engineering News, of New York, will publish summaries showing by groups of States the mileage of track laid, extensions of steam-railway lines in the United States, and the number of passenger trains to be run to do business as common carriers of both freight and passenger traffic, for the calendar year of 1890. According to the figures presented, the total addition to the country's railway mileage between Jan. 1, 1890, and Jan. 1, 1891, was nearly 5,800 miles, or about 700 miles more than in 1889. The total mileage of the railway completed on Jan. 1, 1891, is 167,172, of which amount 36,912 miles, or over 22 per cent., has been constructed during the last five years.

A general passenger agent, yesterday, in speaking of the growth of business between Indianapolis and Chicago and Cincinnati and Chicago, said that it was really remarkable, though he "knew" they were much wiser.

I wished to put some questions concerning Ludo, but I was not sure I ought to do so. I saw she was loath to leave the subject. She informed me that Ludo had once loaned her a story-book. She said there was no doubt that that it was a novel. The character in that book had been the had said decidedly that if it wasn't a novel, it might as well be one. Still she had read it, and it was very interesting. "She didn't know what it was, but she was sure it was a novel. It was a number of years ago now, long enough, she thought, for her to know if she had taken it from any one. She spoke as if referring to having been exposed to the small-pox, or to some contagious disease, and she put the time necessary for her to "come down with it" had passed, and she might consider herself comparatively safe. She dwelt a good deal on that novel. It was the only one she had read over and over again, and Ludo she might have fallen into the habit of reading them. She couldn't tell.

She was looking at me over her bunch of tangerines, and she was looking at the novels, but hesitating to ask. Finally she glanced away; she grew quite red, and her lips trembled as she said that the principal male character in that book had been the Count Alva Adilva. She had never forgotten him. Although he had been very dark, with a curled black mustache, and Ludo had been light, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again she said she had been right, with no mustache, she said the Count had constantly reminded her of Ludo. If she had married Ludo, and if she had had a son she should have named him Alva Adilva. If she had been rich and could have bought the privilege of naming some other woman's son, she should have named him that. Again